Dear Mr. Green:

I noted in this morning's Post where you had made a request of Senator Taft for information as to who was behind anti-labor legislation.

I received the enclosed in this morning's mail which is self-explanatory. While it is a neat job, it does not convey all of this group's work as there has been considerable lobbying in the Senate and some in the House for drastic anti-labor legislation.

Yours truly,

The Honorable Speaker of the Senate
Washington, D. C.

Gentlemen:

The United Nations Legion, World War II Veterans, American Command, would like to go on record as whole-heartedly supporting the posting of bills to curb management and labor as well so that in the future, our country and its people's welfare may no longer be imperiled by strikes. We suggest the creation of a National Board with representation from management and labor alike, and that board begin conciliatory measures at leastt sixty (60) days before expiration of contract. This, we believe, is the democratic way, and it is certainly to the benefit of the country, that we protect the interests of its peoples.

Sincerely yours,

For the National Executive Board:

STATEMENT REGARDING ANTI-LABOR LEGISLATION NOW PENDING - H.R. 3020 and S. 1126 May 26, 1947

Even the most rabid anti-unionists do not seriously advocate that the Hartley Bill be enacted into law. Its provisions are so patently and extravagantly unfair, unreasoned and unworkable as to make them thoroughly unacceptable. And yet, its passage by the House is being effectively exploited by those who are determined to seize upon post-war confusion as a means of pushing through their long-held and long-frustrated anti-union objectives. This is being done by the simple but completely unsupportable device of making it appear that the Senate has demonstrated great statesmanship in rejecting the more obviously crude provisions of the House Bill.

In a very real sense the Senate Bill is far more pernicious than the House Bill precisely because it is a more polished and subtle attempt to accomplish the identical end of destroying the efficacy of collective bargaining by decimating the strength of trade unions.

Because of the omnibus nature of the Bills an extensive analysis of all their provisions would run this memorandum to excessive length. To show the harmful impact they will have both on our economy and on our basic concepts of democratic freedoms, it will suffice to discuss a few of their more salient provisions.

UNION SECURITY

The familiar closed-shop provision whereby an employer and a union representing a majority of its employees voluntarily agree to condition employment upon membership in the union is outlawed by both Bills. Both Bills purport to legitimate the so-called union-shop provision under which employees must become members of the union within a specified number of days following the voluntary agreement. But they do it in a manner that renders it worthless. Under Section 8 (a) (3) of the Senate Bill, for example, it is an unfair practice for an employer who has voluntarily entered into a union-shop arrangement with his employees to discharge any employee for non-membership if he has "reasonable grounds for believing" that the union did not make membership available to him on the same terms applicable to others or that membership was denied or terminated for reasons other than the non-payment of dues. Note well that even if membership was available on the same terms as it was to others or even if the employee has refused to pay dues, the employer may still not live up to his contract if he, the employer, has reasonable grounds to believe that those conditions did not exist.

Under Section 8(b) (2) it is made an unfair labor practice for a labor organization "to attempt to persuade" an employer to enforce his union-shop agreement against an employee whose membership has been denied or terminated for any reason other than his failure to tender dues or initiation fees.

The travesty and mischief in the two foregoing provisions cannot be over-emphasized. One of the most wholesome contributions and aspects of the union-security clause is that it provides for the union's only effective means of disciplining its members and thereby of living up to its contractual obligation. In the great preponderance of instances a union-security clause is matched by a no-strike clause. The two clauses are mutually dependent. It would be a physical impossibility for unions to meet their no-strike contractual commitments if they are not able to be rid of individual troublemakers and agitators who are bent upon embarrassing the union by fomenting wild-cat strikes and similar, illegal disruptions of work. Yet under the Senate Bill unions may not even "attempt to persuade an employer" to discharge such a disruptionist so long as he tenders his dues. And the full evil of thisproposal is appreciated when read together with Section 301, more fully discussed later, which faciliatates damage suits against unions for breach of contract.

In addition to thus depriving unions of their necessary power to discipline employees, the foregoing provisions would make it possible to restore the hateful practice of industrial espionage so completely exposed by the LaFollette Civil Liberties Committee. So long as employer "stooges" tender their dues and fees the union could not, no matter how offensive and destructive their conduct, seek their discharge under a valid union-shop agreement.

Finally, those provisions would facilitate the vicious work of every kind of subversive element in this country. It's an open and notorious fact that Fascist and Communist organizations consider it a primary, indispensable weapon for achieving their goals to generate industrial strife and to capture labor organizations. The success of the American Federation of Labor in resisting the vicious efforts of totalitarian groups within industries and labor organizations is in large measure attributable to the fact that their affiliates have vigorously exercised the disciplinary power obtained through union-security clauses. Under the Senate Bill that power is completely lost. Fascists and Communists can remain at their jobs and spread their poisonous propaganda and manufacture or magnify grievances and labor unions possessing lawful agreements must, nevertheless, abstain from any defensive measures so long as the troublemakers offer their dues or fees.

BOYCOTTS AND JURISDICTIONAL STRIKES
(Sections 8 (b) (4),303)

Both Bills prohibit all secondary boycotts and all so-called jurisdictional strikes, regardless of their specific causes, their precise nature or the manner in which they are carried out. Before analyzing the harmful significance of these provisions, it is perhaps well to observe that there has been a ery elaborate and expensive propagandistic drive to assign to the terms "secondary boycott" and "jurisdictional strikes" something inherently immoral and evil, and hence something properly subject to legislative prohibition. Like all selfishly and unfairly conceived propaganda campaigns, the essential effort has been to deal with words that are surcharged with emotion rather than to deal with things as they realistically exist.

To condemn all jurisdictional disputes, as these Bills do, is actually to condemn the basic cornerstone of our free enterprise system, namely, competition. Jurisdictional disputes among workers are no different in essence from jurisdictional disputes among businessmen, or among executive, legislative and judicial agencies of Government. If anything, jurisdictional disputes among men and women who toil are far more justified than any other type of jurisdictional dispute. They derive from the basic unfortunate circumstance that there are more persons who need jobs to sustain themselves and their families than there are jobs to meet those needs, and this circumstance is acutely aggravated by the continuous introduction of man-displacing machines. Unless we are prepared to overthrow our free society and replace it with a police state which assigns and compels all work, we connot consistently outlaw all labor jurisdictional disputes. Nor is it conceivable, in view of our deeply entrenched history of freedom, that the American worker even under compulsion of law can be prevented from taking peaceful, competitive measures to avoid economic extinction.

The only proper and civilized manner of meeting and handling the inevitable problem of jurisdictional disputes is through voluntary self-regulation, and to this the American Federation of Labor has been dedicated from its very inception. The fact that success has not always been immediate and complete attests not to the impropriety of that method but merely to the inherent gravity and difficulty of the problem.

One of the most conspicuous examples of the arbitrary and extreme nature of these proposals is the manner in which they prohibit all so-called secondary boycotts. The refusal to work on non-union, sub-standard goods is as vital a right as any other possessed by the American worker. It may be categorically stated that all the labor legislation of the past fifteen years was premised on the recognition of the self-evident fact that men have the moral right and should have the legal right to refuse to work on goods or materials that will undermine or destroy their own standards. Should the boycott provisions of these proposals become law, the inevitable effect will be to reduce the purchasing power of the American worker and hence to curtail production and bring on an economic depression. For, the fair employer who is anxious and willing to maintain high wages, low hours, and decent conditions of work, cannot, of course, compete in the same market with the unfair employer. He may not, lest he violate the Anti-trust laws, combine with other fair employers to keep the unfair employer out of the market. All he can do is to go out of business himself or reduce his standards to those of his competitors. To say that his employees may not, in self-defense, refuse to work on or otherwise handle products of the unfair employer, is to make it the national policy of this Government to encourage low wages, a low standard of living, reduced production and recurrent depressions.

GOVERNMENT BY INJUNCTION
(Sections 10 j, 10 l)

The Hartley Bill effectively repeals the Norris-LaGuardia Act and allows private employers to obtain injunctions in virtually every situation where such injunctions were obtained prior to the enactment of the Norris-LaGuardia Act. The Senate Bill seeks to avoid the charge of obvious employer favoritism by the device of limiting injunctions to those sought by an agency of government. Here again, it is merely a subtle and obscuring device. The fact is that under the Senate Bill, and particularly Section 10 (l), it is the employer that initiates the injunction. If an employer files a charge with the Labor Board that a union is committing certain unfair practices, then the Labor Board is under mandate to apply for an injunction if upon ex parte investigation by some Regional Office there is reasonable ground for believing the charges true. In other words, upon the mere filing by an employer of a prima facie charge the Labor Board must immediately obtain an injunction that remains in full force and effect until the charge is fully heard and determined by the Labor Board, a period that may in some cases run well over a year. We may pass over the discriminatory fact that there is no similar provision which compels the Board to enjoin employer unfair practices. We need only emphasize that the only real difference in this respect between the House Bill and the Senate Bill is that in the former it is the employer who must bear the brunt and expense of obtaining a court injunction, whereas under the Senate Bill the employer accomplishes the same end through the aid, financial and otherwise, of the Government.

SUITS AGAINST LABOR ORGANIZATIONS
(Section 301)

Provisions in both Bills dealing with union liability for breach of collective labor agreements do not change existing substantive law. They are, however, calculated greatly to encourage litigation by removing the usual federal jurisdictional requirements of diversity of citizenship and of an amount in controversy of not less than $3,000.00 These proposals will, inevitably, impose a tremendous load on federal courts. Moreover, and more importantly, the labor-management relationship is, essentially, a human relationship, and no human relationship will develop wholesomely and flourish if it is subjected to the psychological strains and tensions attendant upon litigation. The policy implicit in these provisions is no wiser or no more desirable than one of encouraging and facilitating litigation between husband and wife, or between parents and children. Here again, the real purpose of the Bills is not to advance collective bargaining or a healthy industrial relationship but to expose n treasuries to complete exhaustion by defending against less suits.

MISCELLANEOUS

As already noted, these remarks do not attempt even a cursory examination of the language of undesirable changes contained in the proposals of both Houses of Congress. We have merely described some -- but hardly all - of the more important provisions that readily demonstrate their anti-labor design, their unworkability and their deleterious effect on our whole economy and on the public welfare. It is well, however, to make brief reference to additional features of these Bills that are self-evidently objectionable.

1) Supervisory Employees. (Section 2 (11) of Senate Bill). Both Bills broadly define "supervisory employees" so as to include many categories of workers who are not normally regarded as such, and both adopt the untenable theory that such employees may form and join labor organizations but may not enjoy any of the rights protected by the National Labor Relations Act; instead they can obtain recognition only by strikes and they can resist employer intimidation, coercion and discrimination only by economic action. This can only result in a repetition of foremen strikes such as those following the original but since repudiated policy of the Labor Board not to accord full rights to supervisory employees.

2) Changes in the Wagner Act. Both Bills make extensive detailed changes in the National Labor Relations Act and in its administration with the net, contradictory effect of vesting a huge new jurisdiction in the Board and, at the same time, weakening its present structure. The result will be even greater and hence more distressing delays in resolving labor disputes by effective decisions.

3) "National Emergencies".(Section 206 of Senate Bill) Both Bills vest extraordinary injunctive powers in the Attorney General in connection with so-called and most loosely defined "National emergency strikes", without providing any machinery fairly to protect the just and legitimate interest of the workers involved. It goes without saying that while organized labor may have full confidence in the good faith and self-restraint of the present Attorney General, no one can safely predict that future Attorney Generals will not vastly abuse the extraordinary powers vested by these provisions.

4) Welfare Funds. (Section 302 of Senate Bill) Both Bills deal with welfare funds. The House Bill outlaws all welfare funds and the Senate Bill severely limits the kind of welfare funds that may be established and in the manner in which they may be administered, thereby unduly, unnecessarily limiting the scope and effect of collective bargaining.

5) Weakening of the Department of Labor.(Title II of Senate Bill) Both Bills set up a new mediation machinery that is separate and apart from the Department of Labor, thus creating

...ll another autonomous federal agency to deal with labor ...oblems and further dismembering and weakening the Department ...f Labor.

6) Check-Offs. (Section 302 of Senate Bill) Both Bills, for no conceivable reason other than to harass labor unions, prohibit all check-offs save separate revocable assignments by individual employees.

7) Company Unions. Both Bills contain provisions dealing with so-called independent unions whose only possible purpose is to add status and respectability to company unions.

The outstanding fact of all the provisions of both Bills is that not a one begins to meet the real causes of the major post-war stoppages that ostensibly give rise to the need for new legislation. It is indisputable that production and profits after taxes are at the highest peacetime peaks in our entire history. It is equally indisputable that rising prices and loss of over-time have substantially reduced both the nominal and the real income of workers. It is, finally, indisputable that most of the large postwar strikes were caused or extended by arbitrary employer action. Now, then, can one rationally explain the tone and content of these Bills? The answer, we say, is alarmingly self-evident. Selfish, reactionary and powerful economic forces see their great opportunity in the confusion inevitably attending the close of the most absorbing and concentrated war effort in our history to which labor made an invaluable contribution in blood, in sweat and in energy; an opportunity to smash the gains of workers laboriously and honorably earned over the years and to restore an employer position of supreme economic dominance from which employers can unilaterally dictate the terms of the employer-employee relationship. They seek, in short, to abandon the national policy in furtherance and in encouragement of collective bargaining and they do so while giving inane and hypocritical lip service to collective bargaining. That policy has been thoroughly tested in the severe and trying circumstances of national peril and all-out war, and it has more than proved and justified itself. True statesmanship and a high regard for the welfare of our citizenry and indeed of the entire stricken world that looks to our vigor, our liberalism and our prosperity as the main hope for their salvation demand that these proposals fail of enactment.

My dear President:

I do think the Taft-Hartley labor bills are the most unneeded and undemocratic bills that has ever been introduced in the United States Congress. I cannot think that the workers of the American Federation of Labor merit any such treatment at the hands of our Congress. If and when the bill come to you, I respectfully request you veto this vicious bill.

My dear Congressman:

I thank you for your two letters, one dated May 9th and the other dated May 10th, and for the important and interesting information you transmitted therein.

The documentary information which you brought to my attention is evidence of the propaganda which has been resorted to in a broad, big way by the enemies of labor to influence Congress to pass highly-objectionable labor legislation.

Please be assured that your interest and service in this particular matter are very deeply appreciated.

Very truly yours,

Dear President Truman:

Should the Hartley-Taft Omnibus Anti-Labor bill become the law of the land free collective bargaining in our Democracy will become a farce and the Bill of Rights of every man and woman who toils will be placed in jeopardy.

We cannot imagine our President signing this bill which will deprive the workers of their hard won rights secured through the years and work a great injury to the rights of all free workers and spell disaster to all Organized Labor.

Therefore the Norwalk Central Labor Union of Norwalk Connecticut speaking for and in behalf of approximately 5.000 organized workers emplore you as President of the United States to use your prerogative and veto this most obnoxious anti-labor bill which was conceived with malice and passed with a vengeance.

With best wishes,we are very sincerely yours.

Dear Sir and Brother:

We would appreciate receiving another copy of your letter of April 22, 1947, sent in reply to our Legislative Committee Chairman's wire of April 20 as follows:

"The Greater Muskegon Trades and Labor Council urges you and your staff to put on a more effective program to curb or water-down the omnibus labor bill which is now to be considered in the Senate. Both Organized and Unorganized Labor must make a more effective voice before Committee hearings, in legislative practices, and in the press in order to defeat the sweeping anti-labor policies now before Congress. If all measures suggested fail we urge you to contact the best dozen of pro-labor senators and stage a filibuster. May we hear what you are doing and plan to do? --Russel O. Partington."

Dear Sirs,

I have always been a champion of labor and always will be. Anything pertaining to the betterment of the working man and his family will always have the backing of liberal minded people at all times. Would you please let me know how I may help fight the fascist labor bill that the Republicans are trying to pass at this time. I have written my representative but I feel that this is not enough.

Sincerely,

Hon. Wm. green, President

Dear Sir:

I have read in the newspapers, that you expect, that the President will veto the Hartley-Taft Slave labor bill I am not sure about that.

Republican Senator Tobey of New Hampshire told a trade Union delegation of his state that according to his information, the President will sign the Hartley Taft bill, as he has signed the bill against the portal suits.

It is possible, that the Republicans are spreading purposely such rumors to discourage the Workers from fighting against their slave labor bill.

But the progressive democrat, Robert Wagner, is also pessimistic about the possibility of a Presidential veto. He declined an invitation to a banquet which the C.I.O. Unions wanted to give for him., because he is afraid that the President may sign the bill and kill the Wagner Labor de Therefore, I suggest to you to See the President and induce him to veto the bill.

Besides that, I want you to intensify the campaign among those Democrats and Republican Senators, who have voted for the bill, asking them to abstain from voting, when the bill will come back to the U.S. Senate from the Conference room.
Some political observers think that if the bill will get not more than 60 (sixty) votes (He has got before 68 votes), then the President will veto it, as the Republicans will be unable to override it (64 votes is necessary to override a veto).
The Democrats have shown 44 votes against the Republican tax bill. If they would show so many votes in opposition to the State Labor Bill, would be all right.

I wrote to Senator Burkley, asking him to influence the President to veto the bill and to tell the Southern democrats to abstain from voting, if they dont want to vote against the bill.

He wrote to me a letter, in which he promised to take my adaise in consideration. You have to see him in person. I hope and trust, that with your help Senator Barkley will succeed to obtain a veto and to sustain it. It all depends upon the Southern Democrats. They have the votes to block the bill. If they dont want to vote against the bill, let them abstain from voting. (most of them voted for the bill)

Dr. Benjamin Chapman
