Mr. Hershey

Dear Sir:

RE: MONOGRAPH ON TAFT-HARTLEY ACT

Gerhard P. van Arkel, former General Counsel of the National Labor Relations Board, has just completed for the Institute a new monograph providing a thoughtul and provocative section by section analysis of the Taft-Hartley Act. It is now on the press and will be available in approximately two weeks.

Under the title "An Analysis of the Labor Management Relations Act, 1947", Mr. van Arkel has packed into 75 pages his observations concerning the implications of the changes in the old Wagner Act which this new legislation has created, the areas of ambiguity and conflict, and the sign-posts for probable interpretations which can be detected in the legislative debate that preceded the Act, or which have thus far arisen in its administration.

Mr. van Arkel's unique qualification as the author of this monograph need not be emphasized. I sincerely believe he has produced by far the most authoritative and soundly analytical commentary on the Act yet to appear. It bears directly on the problems which are arising daily in the confusion and uncertainty of labor-management relations and litigation under the impact of the new law. It is, I believe, as essential a part of the library of all those who are engaged in, or who will engage in labor work, as the text of the Act itself.

To obtain copies of this monograph the moment it leaves the press, merely attach your check for $2. per copy, type or print your name and address where indicated, and return this letter to us promptly. As with all Institute publications, this monogaph may be returned for credit in full after ten days' examination, should you for any reason find it unsuited to your purposes.

Please order promptly—the edition will be limited.

Yours very truly,

Harold P. Seligson

TO THE OFFICERS AND FIELD MEN
INTERNATIONAL BROTHERHOOD OF PAPER MAKERS

Dear Sirs and Brothers:

A few days ago I received a letter from a very sincere friend of mine who occupies a top flight executive position in the industrial world. After paying me some compliments on the philosophy, the work and achievements of the Paper Makers Union, he asked the following question: "Why do you object to the Taft-Hartley Law?" - and continued with the following:

> "I am not trying to draw you into an argument but am honestly seeking enlightenment in an effort to see the other fellow's side and remove the beam from my own eyes and trust I am not imposing on your time or good nature in awaiting a reply to
> Your very puzzled friend,

I am attaching hereto a copy of my answer to my friend stating why I am opposed to the Taft-Hartley Law, or, more specifically, the Labor-Management Relations Act of 1947. You may find these letters of some help to you in your field work.

Sincerely yours

Matthew J. Burns

Mr. _____, Chairman of the Board

Dear Mr. _____:

 Now to answer your question - Why do I oppose the Taft-Hartley Law? Let me first say that I oppose it because I find myself unable to compromise the fundamental principles of the freedom of mankind, which are so explicitly set forth in the "Bill of Rights" contained in the Constitution of the United States. This Constitution sets up the political form of Government and the rules of conduct for these United States. The Taft-Hartley Law does violence to these precepts.

I subscribed to the philosophy of the Trade Union movement in America because, in the past, fundamentally, it sought to effect reforms through economic and industrial organization, rather than through political organization. The Taft-Hartley Law now makes it necessary for the Unions to resolve themselves into political organizations in order to survive under the controls of the political Governments and by the fortunes of political parties.

The most effective weapon the Fascist and the Soviet systems employ to destroy the democratic governments of a people, is to divide the people and array class against class, while a few politicians and schemers form a dictatorship and eventually put all the people in a straight-jacket. The spiritual essence of the democratic system is then quickly diluted and the Brotherhood of Man is denied and forbidden by the dictatorship.

Now I am not a crusader. I do not enter into a debate on this subject with any fire or passion at anytime. I have, however, a strong conviction in the ideas of American democracy, that is; We, the people recognize a power greater than ourselves which is the Supreme Being who rules the Universe. We accept the virtues of Obedience,

Discipline and Respect for law and for the rights of every individual as guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States. "God governs in the affairs of men when they live by His Laws."

The Taft-Hartley Law was conceived in anger and it assumes that all labor unions are treasonable institutions and that their officers are suspects of treason and must be presumed to be guilty until they file a sworn statement with the Government that they are not contemplating overthrow of the Government. Those who hold advanced views are branded as Communists. The meaning of the word "Communist" in its application to economic, social and political questions, is not defined by the Act. The officers of the National Association of Manufacturers are not required by this Law to file Affidavits with the Government, stating that they are not contemplating overthrow of our form of Government. Likewise, this is not required of any other trade association or of the Chambers of Commerce.

There is much information on file with the Government to the effect that many industrial concerns in the United States, prior to 1941, made trade agreements with the Nazi outfit in Germany which permitted the Hitler regime to take a monopolistic control in the United States of what was then considered critical and strategic materials. Granted, these industrialists were trying to improve trade and were not intending to injure their country - but why should this crowd now seek to prove that all labor unions and their officers are guilty of working with a foreign power and therefore must be put under the direct control of the Government - and that no labor union can function in industry until its officers swear that they are innocent of the vague but all embracing charge, Guilty of Treason.

I am opposed to the Taft-Hartley Law because it is a good start in the direction of a Fascist movement in America, and unless this movement is checked by repeal of this Law, other laws with a similar intent will follow and they will be aimed at citizens who are not associated with labor unions.

I make no attempt here to put forth any of the achievements of the unions of which everyone in America can well be proud of - nor do I want to deal here with the regrettable acts of the unions. I do not deny that many unions are self-centered and ignore their obligations to the general welfare of the people. However, even that does not justify the politician in tarring us all with the same stick. There are some men in Congress who are so blinded by their hatred for their fellow men that they are incapable of distinguishing between good and evil. These men must be removed from the legislative halls of the nation.

About six weeks ago I addressed an International Convention of the Pulp Workers' Union, held in Milwaukee, Wisconsin. I was speaking directly to the workers on that occasion and dealt with some of the shortcomings of the members of unions more bluntly than would be appropriate here. I am enclosing a copy of the address referred to. It has been in circulation for some time.

Thanks for having remembered me and for having written me your warm sentiments.

Sincerely

...ve Them the Facts

BY LAWRENCE STESSIN

With workers' fears mounting under the influence of harmful propaganda, employers must actively combat misapprehension concerning the new labor law. Here's how to do it

SINCE the passage of the Taft-Hartley Act unions have maintained a relentless barrage of invective against the new law. While Congress has been the major target, employers are not coming out unscathed. In the labor press and other media of labor propaganda workers are being sold on the notion that management is ready to take advantage of every legalism in the law to strip workers of their rights and unions of their security.

This is not the first instance where industry was on the receiving end of false generalizations. The current campaign, however, is more than a name-calling spree. The writer, just returned from a swing around the industrial circuit, finds that large groups of employees are taking these tall tales to heart, though they cannot produce any concrete evidence of any concerted "weaken-the-union" moves on the part of management.

Here is a digest of what your company can do to meet this vital new problem.

LAWRENCE STESSIN is Labor Editor of FORBES.

How to Overcome Employees' Fears

1. Write a letter to each employee. Send it to his home, and, if possible, have it personally signed by the company president. Stress the following points:

A. The company will continue its policy of using collective bargaining to work out equitable contracts with labor.

B. The firm has no intention of substituting lawyers and legalism for fair play and human relations.

C. The Taft-Hartley Law will have no effect on the company's standard personnel and wage policies. Scotch ideas of layoffs and wage cuts resulting from the application of the new Act.

D. Assure workers that more production is the real answer to job security and wage increases.

E. Invite workers to take advantage of the regular grievance machinery to register any complaints they may have.

F. Call on workers to submit to management any questions about company policies. If you have a plant paper, use the "Letters to the Editor" column for employee questions, and be sure that answers are given with each query.

2. Alert your foremen to the more important role they must now play in view of the new turn of events. Here is a list of "don'ts" which should preface your first supervisor's conference.

A. Don't throw your weight around now that management has been granted additional rights under the law.

B. Don't make any anti-labor statements.

C. Don't get tough with shop stewards or union officials merely because a new law has been passed.

D. Don't neglect grievances. In fact, now is the time to instill confidence in workers by settling complaints quickly and fairly.

E. Don't think that the new law eliminates the need for sound human and labor relations. It is more important now than ever. This is no time for a revival of the gruff and tough "Bull of the Woods" type of foreman.

3. Improve your community relations.

A. Run ads in local papers repeating the theme of your letter to workers.

B. Have company executives make speeches before Rotary and Chamber of Commerce groups.

C. Improve civic spirit. Notify city officials that it is your policy to avoid any future labor trouble.

D. Write a letter to your suppliers and customers on your policy to continue operating as always. Tell them you do not foresee any stoppage of operations because of labor trouble.

E. Call in union officials and explain your policy; suggest that it may be best for all concerned if they eliminate any current or contemplated campaign of vituperation and get down to the business of living in peace with management.

4. Explain the Law.

A. The amount of misinformation about how the new law works is accumulating in colossal proportions. Truth is, the new Act is neither anti-labor nor pro-employer. No other than John L. Lewis himself proved how anti-slave labor the Act really is when he walked off with one of the best contracts ever negotiated by the union. This in spite of all the hullabaloo that the law sounds the death knell for organized labor.

B. Run a series of articles in your employee publication explaining in simple language what the law really does for the individual worker. Some companies are sending simplified versions of the Act to workers' homes.

C. The same should be done for foremen. They are the ones who are being called upon by workers to explain this or that section of the law, and they should be in position to provide the proper answers.

News Behind The News — By Paul Mallon

Survey Indicates Worker Majority Approve Taft-Hartley Provisions

Washington, Aug. 30—Some national union leaders are working themselves up hotter in their campaign to repeal the Taft-Hartley law and are not trying to live by it. In his typical Chicago speech AFL's Bill Green dared the Republicans to run Senator Taft for President, promising Taft the worst defeat in all presidential history. Green said specifically there would be no "compromise" with the law by the unions. He promised complete repeal, or, as he phrased it, "the defeat" of the law.

A private survey of opinions among Green's own workers and others has been made by the Opinion Research Corporation, Princeton, N. J., (Dr. Claude Robinson, president.) This survey challenges Green completely, and sets forth a peculiar condition of workers' opinions under the title: "The Strange Case of the Taft-Hartley Bill." It is marked confidential and the condition it discovered has not been reported for public knowledge or belief, namely this:

The workers generally believe the bill is a slave labor bill, and an instrument of oppression. Yet paradoxically, the same workers generally approve the main features of the law when these are spelled out to them. The worker favors what is in the law but did not know the law contained what he wanted.

A representative sample-method poll of employes showed 54 per cent of all disapproved the law; 64 per cent of union members disapproved (meaning half of all workers, and two-thirds of the union members, roughly.) Opponents say such things as: "We fought for a free country, we should be allowed to strike for our rights," and "Labor went back 50 years under this bill." Forty-six per cent of all employes thought management would now try to bust the unions, 38 per cent excepted management to bargain fairly, while 16 per cent had no opinion.

Changed Tune

But when these same pollees were asked specifically about what is really in the same law, a majority favored every feature of it. And a majority of the union membership alone favored every feature excepting one (outlawing of the closed shop, not realizing that the law approved the union shop.)

The survey gives the percentages of workers support for various features of the new law among the union members alone, as follows: Favor 60 day cooling, 70 per cent; suits against unions, 70; freedom of speech for employers, 61; requiring union financial reports, 85; prohibit Communist leaders, 77 prohibit union political contributions, 50; allow checkoff only with workers' consent, 74; allow union shop only with majority vote, 77; outlaw closed shop 48; delay strikes in public service industries, 70. The survey recommends to its clients a management campaign to acquaint workers with the provisions of the bill. The poll claims further only 54 per cent of workers were able at the outset to name any specific provision of the law their leaders oppose.

Not the least surprising aspect of this news phenomena is specific evidence in the poll that

A DEADLY CONTRAST

". . . I give full credit to Senator Wagner, who developed this idea of making collective bargaining more effective than it was before. It was not opposed by the Republicans, and it is fair to say that its basic principle is accepted by all, and certainly will not be impaired by any amendment which Congress is likely to approve. . . ."

COMMENTARY
425 FOURTH AVENUE, NEW YORK

November 10, 1947

We think you will be interested in the attached article by A. H. Raskin, labor reporter on the New York Times, which appears in the November COMMENTARY.

Mr. Raskin makes the interesting point that the real danger of oppressive labor legislation lies not so much in its direct effects as in the fact that it keeps labor on the defensive and hinders the development of a positive and constructive trade union philosophy -- which, Mr. Raskin feels, is an urgent necessity if America is to fulfill its responsibilities to the peoples of the world.

We should be glad to receive any comments you may have to make on Mr. Raskin's article, for possible publication in our "Letters from Readers" department.

TO THE BOILERMAKERS' NATIONAL NON-PARTISAN COMMITTEE FOR THE REPEAL OF THE TAFT-HARTLEY ACT:

Realizing that the Taft-Hartley Act was passed for the purpose of destroying the wages and working conditions of myself and all other wage earners, I hereby pledge myself to the following:

(1) That I will qualify to vote and strive to have my family and friends do likewise.

(2) That I will devote my full time on Election Day, November 2, 1948, in urging all voters to go to the polls to vote out of Congress all members who supported the Taft-Hartley Act.

(3) Finally, I voluntarily pledge to contribute the sum of..... .....Dollars per month from January to December, 1948, to the Boilermakers' National Committee to repeal the Taft-Hartley Act, the proceeds to be used in this fight exclusively as may be determined by the National Committee.

TAFT-HARTLEY AND LABOR'S PERSPECTIVE

Where is the Unions' Constructive Program?

A. H. RASKIN

AMONG the songs that enjoyed a great vogue a year ago was a sprightly little number called "Accentuate the Positive." So unremittingly was it repeated by radio and juke-box that people had to stuff cotton in their ears to elude it. Probably the best job of ear-stuffing was done by the leaders of the American labor movement. They rejected not only the song, but its basic idea as well.

It is a commonplace in our democratic society that we know what we are against but we do not know what we are for. Nowhere is that negative spirit more evident than in the ranks of labor, and nowhere is it more tragically insufficient. To those who feel that much of the vitality of our democracy stems from the vigor of our unions, this lack of affirmative goals is particularly dispiriting at a time when the worldwide survival of free institutions appears to depend almost as much on the luminosity of our political example and morale as on the abundance of our material aid.

Labor's primary emphasis at the moment is on the building of political organizations in preparation for the 1948 national elections. The American Federation of Labor, the Congress of Industrial Organizations, and the independent railroad brotherhoods are all determined to put forth the most strenuous political drives in their histories. Unfortunately, however, the unifying element in these separate drives is not the achievement of any constructive program. It is the elimination from Congress of the men who voted for the Taft-Hartley law.

Political forecasting at a year's distance is a chancy business, but it seems reasonably safe to predict that the rank and file of labor will not react to the Taft-Hartley issue with the vehemence of its leaders. Only two things might alter this forecast. One would be a major depression before next November. The other would be a sudden outburst of union-busting by employers.

I leave it to others to speculate on the likelihood of a recession in the next twelve months. In so far as the attitude of employers is concerned, the best judgment that can be made after four months of experience with the new labor law is that most business men appear determined not to give labor any provocation, at least until after the crucial election next year.

INDEED, employers have been so apathetic about invoking the weapons put in their hands by the law as to leave some of the law's Republican sponsors sputtering indignantly at their ingratitude. Representative Hartley, in particular, has stumped the country demanding that the leaders of industry stop "conspiring" with labor to find ways of by-passing the law. To their credit, most industrialists have shown little disposition to respond to this goading.

There are four possible explanations for the conciliatory attitude displayed by employers in the early weeks of the Taft-Hartley law. The first, and perhaps the most cogent, is that opportunities for profit-mak-

A. H. RASKIN, of the New York Times, is recognized as one of the best-informed and most objective journalists in the labor field. During the war, he served in the army as a lieutenant-colonel in the labor relations field. He has been with the Times since 1935, and has published articles in numerous national magazines. He wrote "Check-Reins for Labor?" in the February 1947 COMMENTARY. Mr. Raskin was born in Edmonton, Canada, in 1911, and graduated from the College of the City of New York.

RECEIVED NOV 17 1947

ing are so great at the present time that few industrialists are willing to risk any interruption or slowdown in production as a result of labor discord.

A second factor is a desire on the part of many large employers to avoid any test of economic strength until after the 1948 elections for fear that a showdown now would jeopardize the Republican chances of carrying the country next year.

Still a third element in the current calm is the uncertainty that clouds many features of the law. Most business men, especially those with big plants, prefer to have others bring the court tests that will decide whether controverted sections are valid and what they mean. Few want to pick a fight and then find the legal ground shot out from under them by an adverse court decision.

The fourth factor, and the only one that offers real hope for long-term stability in labor relations, is a growing conviction in some sections of industry that the welfare of both management and labor depends on wholehearted acceptance of the principles of collective bargaining. That means something more than sitting down and talking to one another. It means a real sense of partnership between employer and union, and a translation of that partnership into increased industrial democracy and productivity.

Only to the extent that this spirit becomes universal in labor and in industry can we expect the present lull in hostilities to lengthen into a full-fledged peace, punctuated only by the occasional spats that are inevitable in the relations between men and nations even when they have learned to respect one another and to recognize their interdependence. How good are the prospects for maintaining a solid floor of cooperation under future labor-management relations?

WITHOUT questioning the validity of the argument that the Taft-Hartley Law obstructs, rather than helps, in the spread of such cooperative relationships, one looks in vain for signs that the campaign for its repeal is likely to bring forth any constructive labor proposals for substitute to promote industrial harmony guard the public against abuses of unions or employers.

During the months that preceded ment of the Taft-Hartley Law, friends in Congress entreated Philip M and William Green to advance plans their own for modification of the Wag Act as a means of staving off more drast measures. Both took the pious view that there could be no compromise with reaction. The net effect was to leave the field in possession of their enemies.

Now that the law is on the books, labor seeks to blow it off with the blanket condemnation that it is a "slave" law incompatible with America's protestations of concern for the principles of freedom and democracy. There is no doubt that the "slave" label has big appeal at union conventions. Delegates unfailingly and unanimously resolve to raise funds and ring doorbells to see that the rascals responsible for perpetrating this atrocity are driven out of public life. Millions of dollars and millions of votes are thrown into the battle (conversationally). The workers are depicted as more irate than ever before, and more determined to translate their resentment into devastating political action.

But are they? Most observers think not. The law simply does not seem that important to the average worker. He may disapprove of the law—I am sure most workers do. But it is not a burning issue in most areas, and it is questionable that any amount of oratory will make it so. The crushing defeat sustained by the labor forces in the Eighth Pennsylvania District, where the Taft-Hartley Act was made the cardinal issue, indicated the gulf between the threats of union leaders and their ability to deliver.

Even more discouraging from the standpoint of those who talk so glibly of a Congressional purge were the findings of a survey made by the Opinion Research Corporation for Look Magazine. This survey disclosed that many workers who opposed the new law were nevertheless in favor of st of its basic provisions. In this vy votes of approval were given by to clauses requiring unions to ac-for their funds, barring Communist ers, establishing a sixty-day cooling-off iod before strikes, making union-shop reements dependent upon majority vote of the employes, and granting more freedom of speech to employers. If these findings constitute a trustworthy guide, opposition to the statute may diminish, rather than increase, as workers learn more about it.

Apart from the Taft-Hartley law, labor has little around which to build a political campaign. That is not to say there is a dearth of issues. With prices and profits at record highs and with the retreat from the New Deal in full swing, there are plenty of issues. But there is no agreement between the AFL and the CIO as to how these problems should be met. What is worse, there is not even agreement within the AFL or within the CIO.

A good deal of the difficulty grows out of the fact that 1948 is a presidential election year. Now it is obviously impossible to whip up a tremendous groundswell of political interest in a presidential year unless there is a candidate for president whose personality and program excite the enthusiasm of the voters. It is regrettably true that President Truman is not the kind of man to fire anyone's imagination. With the exception of General Eisenhower, there is no one on the Republican side with magnetism enough to dissipate the distrust that most workers have learned to feel for that party.

It is not unnatural, therefore, that labor leaders talk exclusively in terms of Congressional and local candidates for next year and shun references to the presidency. It is more than possible that the AFL will not throw off this ambivalent position even after the rival presidential candidates have been nominated. The Federation's high command is so split between Democrats and Republicans that any attempt to force through a presidential endorsement might torpedo the whole political action movement within the AFL. On the other hand, if the Democrats adopt a national platform committing their party to repeal of the Taft-Hartley law, any AFL failure to back President Truman would undercut efforts to drum up votes for Taft-Hartley foes on a local basis.

Philip Murray and his top associates in the CIO have pretty much made up their minds that they will have to support Truman. However, they are not enthusiastic and doubt that they can persuade their members that the President is the dynamic champion they need to get rid of repressive legislation and bring prices down.

Moreover, the Communist elements in the CIO are dedicating all their energies to tearing down the Truman administration as a tool of "Wall Street monopolies." With a fervor that sometimes obscures the illogic of their arguments, the pro-Moscow group is peddling the notion that the Truman Doctrine and the Marshall Plan are instruments in a big business plot to put across a Taft-Hartley act for the whole world.

It is not true, as has so often been charged, that Communists control the CIO Political Action Committee. But it is true that they have supplied most of the motive force for the field work of PAC. They have no equals when it comes to distributing leaflets, visiting voters, setting up precinct organizations, and doing all the other thankless jobs that are essential to arousing the electorate. If, in the forthcoming campaign, they back CIO domestic policies and sabotage CIO foreign policies, PAC will suffer a first-class attack of schizophrenia.

The curious blend of ardor and apathy with which labor views the 1948 elections focuses fresh attention on the infantile state of political development in the union movement. Samuel Gompers' doctrine of "reward your friends and punish your enemies" still defines labor's political philosophy, just as "more pay for less work" defines its economic aspirations.

To be sure, there exist within the PAC and the new political education league planned by the AFL potentialities for raising this level of political thinking. But in all candor, it cannot be said that these potentialities have manifested themselves in any positive form up to now.

NONETHELESS, the recent conventions of the AFL and the CIO must be credited with having improved the outlook for such thinking by reducing the obstructive power of extremists on the Right and Left—to be more specific, of John L. Lewis in the Federation and the Communists in the CIO. When and if labor gets around to defining its political direction in terms of concrete goals, the only contribution Lewis and the Communists can be expected to make lies in demagogic confusion. To the extent that both have lost influence, hope for a progressive political program has increased.

Ironically, Mr. Lewis' humiliation at the San Francisco AFL convention grew out of his endeavor to use the Taft-Hartley issue as a stepping-stone to the one real ambition of his life—the presidency of a combined labor movement. The specific issue seized upon by the domineering leader of the United Mine Workers was the law's requirement that union officers swear they were not Communists in order that their organizations might make use of the services of the National Labor Relations Board.

Robert N. Denham, the NLRB's general counsel, interpreted this as meaning that all top officers of the AFL had to sign non-Communist affidavits before any AFL local union could ask the board to conduct an election or hear an unfair labor practice charge. Mr. Lewis, as an AFL vice-president, could thus force a boycott policy on the Federation's entire membership, even though all his colleagues in the executive council were eager to sign.

With characteristic arrogance, Lewis leaped at the opportunity to thwart the will of the majority. Not only did he refuse to sign in his own right; he berated his associates as craven, cringing "belly-crawlers" who were signing the death warrant of organized labor with each attestation that they were not Communists.

The NLRB took some of the heat out of the issue by overruling its counsel's interpretation, but the status of the so-called several locals, which function directly under the AFL executive council, left Lewis in a position to deprive some 300,000 workers outside his own union of NLRB protection.

When he rose at San Francisco to speak in support of his stand, he was making his supreme bid for power. Nearing sixty-eight, his hair silvered and his frame weakened by ill health and sadness over the death of his wife, the UMW chief was still a man to strike terror into the breasts of those who crossed his will. Since his return to the Federation less than two years ago, he had established himself as its most influential single leader. In meetings of the executive council, he was so overbearing that more than one of his fellows wished he had never been invited back. Yet none dared speak out against him.

His words at San Francisco were directed not alone to the AFL delegates. He was talking across 3,000 miles to the convention of the CIO in Boston. Well aware of Philip Murray's implacable resolve that Lewis should never again gain domination over the unions now in the CIO, the mine leader was carrying forward his attempt to woo away the rank and file of strategic CIO unions and enlist them under his banner.

The results were devastating—for Mr. Lewis. The AFL delegates listened politely but with mounting fury to his tirade, then smote him down in an avalanche of hostile votes. This in the face of a warning that he would feel compelled to withdraw from the executive council—and perhaps, he hinted darkly, from the Federation as well. As encouraging as the vote was the readiness of such Federation leaders as George Meany, Daniel J. Tobin, and David Dubinsky to take the floor in open denunciation of the UMW overlord.

AT BOSTON the deflation of Mr. Lewis had less apparent but equally salutary repercussions. Probably the chief of these was in Mr. Murray's attitude on the Communist problem in the CIO. Communism is personess, Mr. Murray has felt that responsibility was to prevent the being torn apart by wrangling Communist issue. In this under- desire to maintain unity, he has, opinion of many anti-Communists, to strengthen the hold of left-wingers a number of key unions and has often permitted them to use the CIO as a vehicle for the pursuit of party-line objectives. On issues important to the Communists, notably foreign policy, the right-wing forces have consistently found themselves thwarted in efforts to uphold American positions or to criticize the actions of the Soviet Union.

At the outset of the Boston convention there was little to indicate any departure from this policy of cautious neutrality. A middle-of-the-road resolution on foreign policy was formulated in accordance with instructions from Murray. Designed to win unanimous acceptance, it was one of those pallid documents from which neither side could derive encouragement or offense.

But it became apparent early in the proceedings that the Boston gathering was to be no joy ride for the leftists. Their first setback came with the announcement that Murray had invited Secretary of State Marshall to speak. This was followed by a whole series of Murray rebuffs to the "party-line" followers, all leading up to the tumultuous ovation given General Marshall and Murray's declaration that he interpreted the meaningless resolution on foreign policy as an all-out endorsement of the Marshall Plan. To top things off, the CIO president heckled one left-wing speaker with a jeering reference to free speech for the "heroes of Stalingrad," helped engineer a demonstration of greeting for Joseph Curran on his arrival in Boston after a narrow and hard-won victory over the Communists in the National Maritime Union, and gave the signal for removal of R. J. Thomas as a vice-president in favor of O. A. Knight, right-wing head of the Oil Workers.

The chances that Murray will maintain a consistent anti-Communist position in the future are greatly enhanced by the diminished stature of John L. Lewis. So long as the specter of a Lewis-dominated unification of the labor movement loomed over Murray, his primary interest was in preventing any disaffection within the CIO. Now that Lewis is out of the AFL executive council, Murray is less dependent on the continued fealty of the pro-Communist wing.

EVEN if Lewis and the Communists renew the alliance that existed between them from 1935 until Hitler's termination of the Nazi-Soviet pact in 1941, they cannot exert a decisive influence in the affairs of American labor. Despite the bitter things Lewis and the leftists have said about one another in recent years, it would be far from surprising if the old entente cordiale were resumed.

Lewis is not the man to rest content with control of the mine workers. He needs a broader stage for his talents. The Communists, well entrenched in a dozen CIO unions and skilled in the arts of propaganda and disruption, might serve as useful foils in his attempt to rehabilitate his shattered fortunes and avenge himself on his enemies in both labor camps.

That Lewis, in his turn, could be of benefit to the Communists in their present low state of public esteem is even clearer. On foreign policy, his isolationism would be a real asset at a time when the party's main interest is in convincing the United States that it should mind its own business and not assume its proper and necessary role of leadership in world affairs.

On the Taft-Hartley law, the Communists have a more direct stake than any other group in Mr. Lewis' fight to kill the affidavit requirement. It is well enough to say that Communists are schooled in deception and experience no moral qualms in swearing they are not what they are. But more than moral qualms are involved in submitting a false affidavit under the new labor law. The perjurer is subject to ten years in jail. And the FBI has remarkably detailed information on Communists in union ranks.

Personal security is by no means the only consideration that makes the boycott policy attractive in Communist eyes. It represents a form of political strike against the government and, as such, a precious aid in the perennial Communist effort to persuade the workers that their salvation lies in direct mass action and not in constitutional processes.

Most non-Communist unions have realized from the start that such a policy would deprive them of all the protective features of the act without in any way mitigating its destructive features. Few have been willing to risk the losses involved in the dubious hope that the Taft-Hartley law would follow the Volstead Act into oblivion through disuse. Many felt that the chances of getting rid of the law would be far better if the NLRB collapsed through inability to keep up with the flood of work that would descend upon it if all unions utilized its facilities.

Actually, of all the things wrong with the Taft-Hartley law, the worst is that it threatens to tie up labor relations in a morass of litigation and red-tape. The law is a hodge-podge that will remain obscure in many of its provisions until Congress repeals them or the courts clarify or invalidate them. Even its authors, Taft and Hartley, cannot agree on the meaning of some sections.

THE Republican leadership has made it clear that it will resist any changes at the forthcoming session of Congress. What will happen after that will depend on the outcome of the 1948 election and the character of the new president. I have already indicated my doubts about the effectiveness of labor's congressional purge campaign. These doubts are strengthened by the probability of renewed jurisdictional warfare in the next few months between AFL and CIO unions, with Lewis adding his mite of confusion by warring on both with his catch-all District 50, which literally organizes everyone from baby-nipple makers to grave diggers.

This writer's own regret at the probable failure of efforts to modify the law proceeds primarily from the feeling that there is little hope for any serious labor cooperation in meeting fundamental economic problems so long as labor feels itself under indictment by Congress and the public.

Preoccupied by considerations of elementary security, harassed by repressive legislation, labor finds it easy to shirk long-range problems of social utility and economic stabilization. Even the boldest thinkers in the union movement—men like Walter Reuther of the Auto Workers, and George Baldanzi of the Textile Workers—are obliged to put aside their concern for industrial reorganization and planning and for a more equitable balance of production responsibility between management and labor. Similarly, imaginative programs for governmental action on both the national and international level are placed in cold storage while labor fights a defensive battle.

All of which brings me back to the point I tried to make in COMMENTARY last February, four months before the Taft-Hartley law was passed: the underlying cause of labor discord is not that labor is too strong, but that it is strong without feeling secure. The handicap that the law puts in the way of new organization and the multiplicity of new weapons it makes available to employers for hacking away at the strength of established unions, contributes to this sense of insecurity, with a consequent lessening in labor's readiness to take its necessary place as a vital civic-minded force in our society, instead of a special interest group.

What is needed—and what, unhappily, does not seem to be in the cards at the moment at all—is a sincere, joint effort by management, labor, and the public, as represented by government, to work out a program that will provide a reasonably firm security for all three groups. Neither the Taft-Hartley law nor demagogic campaigns for its repeal can serve as a substitute.

TO OUR EMPLOYEES

DURING recent months a lot has been said and written about the new labor law. Much of what has appeared in print or on the radio has been very one-sided. Either it has been anti-union or anti-management. We feel that our employees would like to know what the real score is. This little booklet attempts to summarize—without using lawyer's language—what the new law means to you, to unions, and to your employer.

Before you read this, however, we want to assure each and every one of you—your families, and the community in which we all work and live, that:

1. The new labor law—or any law for that matter—is no substitute for good labor relations. Only mutual confidence, understanding and cooperation can bring about that type of harmony.

2. The new labor law does not eliminate or hamper honest collective bargaining.

3. We will continue to devote our efforts to making this company a good place in which to work and to turn out products and service which will keep our customers coming back for more.

4. We will live up to the provisions of the new law and will work hand-in-glove with all concerned to maintain and improve our major objectives—understanding, cooperation, mutual confidence.

EMPLOYEE R... BENEFITS UNDE... NEW LABOR LAW

UNDER *the new labor law which is in*tended to take the place of all state laws whose terms are not consistent with it, many companies and employees who heretofore were not affected by the Federal regulations, will now be covered. For example: In some states retail stores and branches of the construction industry were exempt by the old Wagner Act by administrative decision. Now they all come under the new rules. This means that almost everybody except a small number of companies that are strictly in intrastate commerce, will be under the new law's jurisdiction.

A worker's right to join or not join a union is protected by the new law. If a worker or group of workers are coerced or threatened, the NLRB can be called in to order the union to cease such tactics. Similarly, if a company tries to actively discourage a worker from joining a union by threats or coercion, the Board can be called in to protect the employees and the union.

You can decide for yourself whether or not you want to have your union dues deducted from your wages. Unless you do so in writing, the company has no authority to take any money for union dues from your pay envelope. This protection is yours even if the company and the union themselves have agreed to a check-off.

A check-off, if authorized by you, is good for one year. If you want it discontinued after that, you may do so in writing at that time.

Where an employer and a union have signed an agreement in which membership in a union is made a condition of employment, you are protected against "excessive" initiation fees. Under the new law, the National Labor Relations Board has power to investigate and decide whether initiation fees are fair or too high. Such investigations may be made upon a complaint from a worker or a group of workers.

The only time a union can ask for a member's dismissal is for non-payment of dues or initiation fees, where union membership is a condition of employment. In effect, the new labor law gives the worker the right to voice his opinions about union policies without fear of losing his job should he be expelled from the union.

The closed shop has been banned by the new law. An employer is not permitted to use membership or non-membership in a union as a reason for refusing employment.

A company and a union cannot enter into an agreement which would make it compulsory for all employees to join the union after hiring unless a majority of the eligible workers have voted the union permission to negotiate such a clause. When such a vote is taken, the union must receive a majority of ALL the employees in the unit—not just a majority of those who vote.

You as an employee, have the right to take up any grievance with your foreman. You can handle the matter yourself or you can have the union help you. If you choose to take up a grievance on your own, the new law limits the area of adjustment. It provides that any settlement made between you and management must not violate any of the terms of the contract. Also, the company is obliged to give your union representative an opportunity to be present when settlement is made.

If there is a health and welfare fund in operation, the new law makes it a crime for ANYONE to use the money contributed to this fund for any other purpose but the "health and welfare" of the employees and their families. The employee has further protection in health and welfare funds.

Here are six conditions which parties must fulfill if the fund is to be legal and binding:

1. The fund must be for the exclusive benefit of employees and families.

2. Payments must be held in a trust fund.

3. Details of the fund must be in writing.

4. The fund may be jointly administered, which means that the union and the employer share in responsibility.

5. There must be a provision for some neutral person to arbitrate disputes that may develop over the fund.

6. Every year the money in the fund must be audited and checked.

You are entitled to know under the new law how the union operates and how it spends its money. Unions are required to file financial statements with the Government and to make the same information available to members. If a union refuses to file such data with the Department of Labor in Washington, then it cannot directly use the protective services of the new National Labor Relations Board. For example, if an employer commits an unfair labor practice, the union which has not filed the above mentioned information with the Government and with its own members, cannot get the cooperation of the NLRB to order the company to cease such activity.

Here is the kind of information a union is required to furnish if it is to receive protection from the National Labor Relations Board:

What are the initiation fees?

What are the dues for union members?

What are the qualifications or restrictions on joining the union?

How are officers elected and how are stewards chosen?

When and how are special meetings called?

How are assessments levied?

How are fines imposed on union members and for what reasons?

Who can authorize a strike?

How are union monies spent and who gives authority for spending union funds?

How can a union member be expelled?

By the same token, the new law protects you against having Communists as officers of the union. The new rules require unions to file affidavits with the Government stating that none of the officers are Communists. Here too, the union which refuses to reveal such information cannot use the services of the NLRB.

The ballot box is a symbol of American Democracy. The new labor law allows employees to use the ballot box to decide many issues:

1. The employees can ask the NLRB to conduct a vote to determine whether a union represents a majority of the workers in a particular group.

2. It is the workers who must give the union permission to negotiate with an employer a clause in the contract which makes membership in the union a condition of employment. Unless the employees vote okay to such a form of compulsory union membership, the union has no right to make any such agreement with an employer.

3. Even after the employees have granted such a right to the union and a union shop is negotiated with the company, the employees, at the end of one year may (if 30% or more signify their desire to do so), vote again to permit or not to permit the union to negotiate the union shop with the employer.

There is a popular misconception that the n[illegible]y outlaws strikes. That's not true. Workers can still go out on strike legally to improve working conditions, wages and hours. There are, however, some qualifications:

★ Once a contract has been signed between a union and an employer, both sides are expected to live up to the terms of the agreement. In most contracts there are provisions which provide that disputes should be settled through grievance machinery—ending in arbitration. If the employer violates the contract, he can be sued for damages or brought up on charges before the NLRB. Unions which violate the contract by calling strikes during the period of an agreement are subject to the same rules as employers.

★ There is another situation where strikes are illegal. Under the new law, either side to a contract must give the other party 60 days' notice before terminating or modifying a collective bargaining agreement where there is an expiration date to the contract. During this 60-day cooling off period, no strikes are permitted. On the other hand, the employer is not permitted to make any changes in wages or working conditions that may under...

ployees. At the end o...
ing off period, if no agreem...
reached, then strikes are perm...
provided some other method such as arbitration, is not agreed on by both sides.

★ Other strikes which are outlawed are those involving secondary boycotts, sympathy strikes or one aimed at forcing an employer to sign up with a union where he already has a contract with a certified labor organization.

You have a right to cross a picket line thrown around your plant in an illegal strike such as—one called during the 60-day cooling off period, a jurisdictional strike, a secondary boycott or sympathy strike.

UNION RIGHTS AND OBLIGATIONS

PRACTICALLY all of the rights which organized labor won under the Wagner Act are retained in the new labor law:

Unions have a right to organize employees, and employers cannot fire workers for joining up.

If a union feels that it has strength among employees of any company, it can go to the NLRB and ask that a vote be taken. If it wins, then the employer is under obligation to sit down with the union and bargain in good faith.

Once a union has won a bargaining election, it represents ALL the employees who were eligible to vote—even those who voted "no union" originally.

In negotiations with the employer, the union has the right to demand that the employer bargain in good faith. If the company refuses to do so, the union can get help from either the courts or the NLRB, provided the union has "filed" as described in previous pages.

After a union [illegible]
election, it is protected year. No other union can cla[illegible] tion during that period.

The union also has the right to negoti- ate with the employer to check off the union dues of those employees who voluntarily authorize such deductions from their regular pay envelopes.

The union's right to represent all work- ers who request its assistance in processing grievances is fully protected. Even where the initial stage is handled by the individual employee and management, the union may be present at the final settlement or must be notified of the details of the settlement.

If the union feels that the employer has committed an unfair labor practice, it has the right to file a charge with the NLRB.

An employer can be ordered to stop if he engages in the following unfair labor practices:

★ Interferes with employees bargaining collectively or organizing a union of their own choosing.

★ Dominates, supports or contributes financially to aid any labor organization.

★ Discriminates in hiring or in employment because of union membership.

★ Discharges an employee who has been expelled by the union for other than non-payment of dues.

★ Dismisses a worker because he has filed a charge with a Government agency against the employer.

★ Refuses to bargain collectively and in good faith with the union.

The union also has the privilege of appealing through the NLRB or the courts for an injunction against illegal actions by the employer.

The union has the right to participate in the joint administration of any health and welfare fund. The funds are earmarked exclusively for the benefits of the employees and their families.

In case of a dispute, the union is free to call on the Federal or State Mediation Boards for assistance in settling it, but it is not obligated to accept the mediators' recommendations.

The union has a right to call a strike

over contract t
60 days' notice in a expiration or reopening is a definite termination date the contract itself does not provi
some other means of settling the disagreement.

On the matter of union obligations, labor organizations are prohibited by the new law from the following practices:

It is an unfair labor practice and can be stopped by the Government or the courts if a union:

★ Uses force to get employees to join a union.

★ Tries to deprive a union member of his job by expelling him from the union for any other reason but non-payment of dues.

★ Conducts a secondary boycott or sympathy strike.

★ Levies unreasonable dues or initiation fees on union members.

★ Forces an employer to participate in featherbedding.

...arges can be filed either by the employer or the individual workers. The new National Labor Relations Board is required to honor complaints by individual employees or groups of employees.

EMPLOYER RIGHTS, BENEFITS AND OBLIGATIONS

UNDER the old Wagner Act, only the employer was obliged to bargain in good faith. The new labor law has now balanced the scales. It says that unions too, must bargain in good faith by sitting down with management and trying to work out an agreement.

Under the new labor law there is a cooling-off period for the employer too, for 60 days. Here's the way it works:

★ Sixty days before a contract is due to terminate or be modified, either side can notify the other of a desire to change or end the agreement.

★ During that 60-day period, the employer and the union must sit down to bargain.

★ During that period the union is not allowed to call a strike.

★ Neither can the employer engage in any lockout—or for that matter, do

...unit would weaken the union's position, such as granting a plantwide increase to all employees, or making pay cuts without negotiations.

★ Within the following 30 days, if an agreement hasn't been reached, the Federal Mediation Service must be notified.

★ Then finally, after the 60-day period has elapsed and there is no contract, the union is free to call a strike, unless some other method of settlement is agreed to.

When a company has received a demand for recognition from a union, the employer now has the right to ask the NLRB that a vote be taken to determine whether the union has a majority of employees signed up. If so, then negotiations can begin.

It is important for an employer as well as an employee, to know if a union really represents a majority of the workers.

When a contract ends, the management is now permitted to ask the Government to make a check on the union's standing with the employees. This prevents th...

employee from signing up with a union which has lost support of the workers.

If an employer DOES sign up with a union which does not have employee support, then another labor outfit can step in and charge the company with an unfair labor practice. Thus, under the new law, both employer and workers are protected.

The workers can, if they wish, once a year petition the NLRB for a vote when a substantial number feel that the union has fallen out of favor with the rank and file.

*In everyday business, contracts are en*forceable in law. The same thing has now been applied to union agreements. If the employer violates a labor contract, he can be made to stop by Government direction or the company can be sued in the Federal Court. The same penalties now apply to unions. If a union breaks its bond, the employer can ask the NLRB to step in and call a halt to the violation. Similarly, the employer can now go to Federal Court to enforce the agreement. It's a two-way street, but in no case can the individual worker be sued for damages.

The law now provides that those who engage in illegal strikes lose the protection of the NLRB and the employer is under no obligation to rehire those who walked out. If, however, the employer does rehire such "illegal strikers" then they regain their status as regular employees.

The new law permits the employer to express his opinions freely about labor matters. Like everyone else, under our Bill of Rights, the employer now is granted the privilege of saying what's on his mind. But note this: Under no circumstances can the employer use his "free speech" as a method to coerce or threaten workers. That's illegal.

BOILERMAKERS' NON-PARTISAN COMMITTEE FOR THE REPEAL OF THE TAFT-HARTLEY ACT

RESOLUTION

In our International Convention of 1944, our political policy was stated in our declaration of principles: "We reaffirm our adherence to the non-partisan political policy of 'Rewarding our friends and defeating our enemies,' so successfully followed down through the years by the American Federation of Labor, principally because it diffuses the spirit of genuine liberalism through all parties and, secondly, because of the absence of the caste system in America, a class party cannot succeed. Furthermore, we are a trade union and as such, we must approach the treacherous quicksands of politics with extreme caution, so that the work of a lifetime will not be engulfed. Finally, we unhesitatingly declare that the proper place to settle economic problems is across the conference table and not be entrusting them to the whims and caprices of selfish politicians.

"We stand ready to assist the industrial leaders of the various branches of our industry to eliminate cut-throat competition, contest injurious legislation and negotiate understandings sufficiently flexible to permit our friendly employers to combat the influences and the competition of those who still refuse this wholehearted tender of cooperation. To the foregoing lofty principles, we dedicate the full strength of this Brotherhood and pledge unremitting activity to secure their fulfillment. We call upon our membership everywhere to devotedly, and with renewed courage, vigorously join the march onward and upward to a fuller, freer and happier life."

Time and experience have shown that the labor union is the instrumentality which has served to promote the economic, social, and industrial welfare of the workers everywhere. Even non-union workers have been the beneficiaries of the gains made by the organized labor movement.

The organization of working men and women means the mobilization of their economic strength so that they may substitute collective action for individual action. The material, educational, and cultural well-being of all classes of people depend upon an adequate financial income. To workers, that means wages high enough to enable them to maintain themselves in decency and comfort and to establish a standard of living commensurate with the requirements of American citizenship.

This is a noble objective. It squares with the American way of life. Workers everywhere should be encouraged, not hampered or hindered, in their efforts to realize such high and lofty purpose. Such an economic and social order will serve to perpetuate our free democratic form of government, to prevent the spread of communism, fascism or any other kind of "ism" which is contrary to the American way of life, or the acceptance of any totalitarian philosophy, and to serve as a guarantee of the preservation of our free enterprise system.

WHEREAS, The Taft-Hartley Act is Fascist legislation;

WHEREAS, The Taft-Hartley Act extends the interference of Government agencies into the private affairs of industry and labor to a far greater extent than even war time controls;

WHEREAS, The Taft-Hartley Act is an invasion of the constitutional rights of free speech, free press, free assembly and the freedom to contract.

WHEREAS, The Taft-Hartley Act, a Fascist Doctrine, which if it is to be used as a pattern in the United States in Labor-Management relations, will engulf eventually cooperative societies, agricultural organizations, social welfare organizations and even fraternal and religious organizations, which it will strait-jacket in keeping with its doctrine as it seeks to strait-jacket labor.

WHEREAS, Numerous employers in the larger industries in various sections of the Nation have publicly proclaimed that the Taft-Hartley Act is unworkable and will create chaotic conditions in industry in general and, further, some of the larger industries in the Nation have, since the Taft-Hartley Act became Law, signed industry wide agreements with Labor Organizations forfeiting and discarding in these agreements some of the rights that the proponents of the Taft-Hartley Act declared essential for harmonious industrial and labor relations.

Whereas, The Taft-Hartley Act has created such chaotic conditions that hundreds of employers under agreement with this Brotherhood are constantly consulting the Brotherhood as to how we can maintain, in spite of the Taft-Hartley Act, the present fine relationship and close cooperation that has been built up throughout the years.

WHEREAS, It is the definite conclusion of the Delegates, Representatives and Officers of the International Brotherhood of Boilermakers, Iron Ship Builders and Helpers of America, assembled in Chicago, that the Taft-Hartley Act strikes a foul blow at our fundamental liberties; therefore be it

jective; we will never be reconciled to the inequities of that Act; that we shall oppose its administration in every lawful way; and that we shall never cease in our efforts until we succeed in bringing about its repeal. That our action in this respect will be based upon the fact that we regard the Taft-Hartley Act as a slave measure, un-American, vicious and destructive to Labor's constitutional rights; that we shall make every possible lawful effort to defeat every member of the House and Senate who voted for this notorious Taft-Hartley Act; and be it further

RESOLVED, That we recommend to the Executive Council of the International Brotherhood of Boilermakers, Iron Ship Builders and Helpers of America that a National Committee be lawfully established; that State Committees be lawfully established by procedure which shall be developed by the said National Committee; and that in accordance with the procedure which shall be set up by the said National Committee a Congressional Committee be established in each Congressional District where the National Committee shall deem such a Committee necessary; and be it further

RESOLVED, That all of said Committees under the supervision and direction of the said National Committee conduct an intensified lawful campaign to urge the registration of every eligible voter in each of said Congressional Districts; and that said Committees carry forward an intensified lawful effort in each of said Congressional Districts in pursuit of our said objectives to defeat every member of the United States Senate and every member of the National House of Representatives who voted for the said Taft-Hartley Act; therefore be it further

Resolved, That for the purpose of financing the said activities of said committees all members in this Brotherhood who are in favor of the objectives of this resolution and of the said activities of said Committees be urged to voluntarily contribute the sum of one dollar per month and to pay the same to the person or persons who shall be Selected by the said Committee to receive the same; and that one-half of the sum so contributed in each Congressional District shall be retained by the Congressional Committee of that District and the other one-half shall be transmitted to the National Committee, which Committee shall use the same in assisting the said State Committees and such Congressional Committees as the said National Committee may deem necessary.

Action of Executive Council on Resolution 1-A

BE IT RESOLVED by the International Executive Council of the International Brotherhood of Boilermakers, Iron Ship Builders and Helpers of America, that in compliance with the resolution adopted by the Conference of the Brotherhood, assembled in the City of Chicago, Illinois, Friday, the 8th day of August, 1927, that a National Committee be established for the purpose of carrying out the objectives and directions of the said resolution; that said Committee be known as "Boilermakers' Non-Partisan Committee for the Repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act;" that said Committee shall be composed of an indefinite number of members; that said named members of said Committee shall have the power to add thereto from time to time within their discretion;

That Charles J. MacGowan shall be the Chairman of said Committee; that said Committee at its earliest convenience shall select a treasurer and require said treasurer to give bond in such sum as the Committee shall deem adequate; that such treasurer shall be empowered to draw on the funds in the possession of the Committee by check, countersigned by the Chairman, for the payment of all operating expenses of the Committee; that no part of the money coming into the possession of the Committee by reason of the resolution of August 8, 1947, shall be paid out in behalf of or in opposition to any candidate for the National Congress except upon the direction of a majority of the National Committee;

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that, the said Committee take no action of any kind or character in the name of the International Brotherhood of Boilermakers, Iron Ship Builders and Helpers of America; and that no contribution nor expenditure be made for or on behalf of the Brotherhood or out of any funds or money belonging to the International Brotherhood or any of its District or Subordinate Lodges;

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED THAT, said National Committee in accordance with the said resolution of August 8, 1947, develop and provide procedure for the formation of such State and Congressional Committees as it may deem necessary for the carrying out of the objectives and directions of the said resolution; that the National Committee be empowered to employ legal counsel, to obtain quarters for the carrying on of the work of said Committee, and, if necessary, for the carrying on of the work of such State and Congressional Committees as in its discretion may be necessary; that the Committee be empowered to employ such assistants, stenographers or office help, as in its discretion may be necessary; and that the National Committee be empowered to take any other action and incur any expenses which it may deem necessary to carry out the objectives and directions of the Resolution of August 8, 1947;

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED, that the National Committee shall promulgate such rules and regulations for the conduct of its business and that of the State and Congressional Committees as it shall deem necessary, including the collection, preservation and expenditure of the money which may be voluntarily contributed for the purpose of carrying out the objectives and directions of the resolution of August 8, 1947.

Minutes of Meeting of Committee of Boilermakers' Non-Partisan Committee to Repeal Taft-Hartley Act

In compliance with a resolution adopted by the Boilermakers' Conference held at Chicago, August 4th-8th, which was referred to the Executive Council for action, and at the Council meeting held at Chicago, it was determined to appoint a Non-Partisan Committee to carry out the terms of the resolution. This Committee was appointed, consisting of Charles J. MacGowan, O. W. Mursener, Clif Langsdale, J. H. Winger, J. H. Gutridge, W. J. Buckley and L. A. Freeman.

A meeting of this Committee was called in Kansas City at 12:15 p. m., August 26th, at which time a program was discussed which the Committee decided to carry out as nearly as possible. It was determined to leave the membership of the National Committee open for the addition of further members if it was deemed advisable. Upon motion by Mr. Buckley and seconded by Mr. Winger, L. A. Freeman was selected secretary-treasurer of the Conference.

Secretary Freeman was instructed to secure such stationery, mailing permits, post office box, headquarters and paraphernalia of whatsoever kind was needed, so that the Committee could function in the proper manner.

[illegible]

To the Members,
All Locals and Integrated Union,
Affiliated with the American Federation of Labor.

Gentlemen and Brothers:

In reference to the Supplemental Report of the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor to the San Francisco Convention, contained on Page 1[illegible] of the Proceedings, you will note that, particular [illegible] attention is called to the Jurisdictional Law. The report of the Executive Council was approved by the Convention on the seventh day of the Convention and the report of the Committee on Resolutions appears on Page 377 of the Proceedings.

In keeping with that action, the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor is entitled [illegible] to be held in Washington, D.C., beginning [illegible], and, inasmuch as that conference is [illegible] will be of vital importance to the entire labor movement, I have felt that my responsibility [illegible] to invite your organization to be represented by duly [illegible] to the Executive meeting which is of considerable [illegible].

I am, therefore, enclosing herewith certain credentials [illegible] by the Executive Council of the International Brotherhood of Bookbinders, [illegible] this invitation and [illegible] to attend the Jurisdictional [illegible].

There is a question which arises [illegible] by our National Convention in Chicago, August 2, 1917, and is the action of the International Executive Council on the Constitution of the Conference, which was by a National Committee, entirely independent of the International [illegible] composed of six [illegible] within the first [illegible] of the Constitution, and the third item in the question is the [illegible] of the International Jurisdictional [illegible] of the Jurisdictional Law.

Accompanying that question is a letter, signed by the [illegible] which explains the purpose of the International Jurisdictional Committee, and [illegible] with this letter [illegible] is a ballot on which the signer agrees to do one of four things: (1) To ratify to vote; (2) [illegible] the time on election day; and (3) To make [illegible] to the National Committee for the purpose of voting on the vote.

RECEIVED NOV 3 1917

This material has now gone forth to every member of our International Union by direct mail and the expense of mailing was paid for by voluntary contributions received from the officers and representatives of the International Brotherhood. These contributions varied in amounts from $20.00 to $500.00.

The response of the membership to the appeal will be watched by us with considerable interest and I hope by the time the meeting is held in Washington in December that I will have a fair indication of the trend of the plan and the reaction on the part of our membership.

This program is not advanced as a perfect plan and it may not work out, but, at least, it is something substantial that is being tried.

For the information of each Chief Executive, I might say that it was our conclusion that the membership would contribute more generously to an appeal sent direct from a committee known to be composed of the executive officers of the organization, than they would to the manifold pleas and appeals being circulated throughout the country; second, it would enable us to allocate the expenditure of money in States and Congressional Districts where it could be most effective; and third, it would leave us free to fully cooperate with the American Federation of Labor and its affiliated organizations in any joint program that may be formulated at the December 4th meeting.

Trusting these thoughts may assist you in your thinking in preparing for the December 4th Conference, I am, with kindest personal regards,

Fraternally yours,

Chas J MacGowan

Dear Sir and Brother:

Enclosed herewith you will find a pamphlet which contains (1) the resolutions adopted by a unanimous rising vote of six hundred Representatives of our International Union at the recent Chicago Conference, held August 4, 1947 to August 8, 1947, inclusive; (2) A resolution adopted by the Executive Council for the purpose of carrying out the recommendations of the Conference; (3) A synopsis of the deliberations of the "Boilermakers' National Committee for the Repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act." In addition, you will find a pledge card where each member is being requested to VOLUNTARILY contribute the sum of one dollar ($1.00) per month to the "Boilermakers' National Committee for the Repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act" during the year 1948. Briefly, these funds are to be used for the following purposes:

1. Expense of radio broadcasts.
2. Printing and postage.
3. Office rent and stenographic help.
4. Financing campaigns in Congressional Districts and State wide campaigns for United States Senators.
5. Miscellaneous.

NO SALARIES OR EXPENSES ARE TO BE PAID TO ANY OFFICERS OF THE INTERNATIONAL BROTHERHOOD.

American Labor stands at the crossroads; we must either restore our freedom in 1948 or accept further slavery. The Taft-Hartley Act is only the beginning of a well laid plan to enslave Labor, Farmers, small Businessmen and other citizens not a part of the gigantic monopolies throughout the country. It is patterned exactly after the systems used by Hitler and Mussolini and unless we stop it now, two years or five years from now may be too late.

Your National Committee and their friends have voluntarily contributed from their own funds a sum of money to pay for this printing and postage and we have absolute faith in the loyalty of our membership to voluntarily support us wholeheartedly in this vast undertaking. We will make a complete report to the contributors from time to time of all monies received and expended.

In addition, we request the membership in EACH LOCALITY to hold a meeting in the near future and create a Local Committee of three or five members for the purpose of cooperating with the National Committee and also for the purpose of cooperating on a State wide basis. Just as soon as your Local Group has held this meeting and created this Committee, the names, addresses and telephone numbers of the Committee should be sent to the National Committee, P. O. Box 122, Kansas City 17, Kansas. Your duty to yourself, your children and your country demands 100% support.

Cordially and fraternally yours,
BOILERMAKERS' NATIONAL COMMITTEE FOR THE REPEAL OF THE TAFT-HARTLEY ACT.

Dear Sir and Brother:

In answer to your inquiry with reference to the agreement with your employer, I wish to advise that a closed shop agreement entered into after August 22 is outlawed under the Taft-Hartley Act. However, union shop agreements are permitted under certain conditions. A union shop agreement under the Act means any agreement under which employees must become members thirty days after being hired. The conditions which must be met by a union before it can bargain for or enter into a union shop agreement are as follows:

1. The union and its parent organization must have filed the various financial statements, reports, and anti-communist affidavits. These forms can be obtained from your nearest regional office of the National Labor Relations Board.

2. The union must represent a majority of the employees in the unit covered by the contract, which unit must be an appropriate one. A formal certification is not necessary if the foregoing conditions are complied with.

3. The union must go through an election conducted by the new labor board, in which election a majority of all the eligible employees in the contract unit (not just a majority of those voting) must have affirmatively voted for a union shop.

If all of the foregoing conditions are complied with, the union is eligible to bargain for or enter into a union shop agreement. However, there is nothing in the Act to require the employer to enter into such an agreement even after all of these conditions have been fulfilled.

In order to have an election held it will be necessary for you to make application to the Regional National Labor Relations Board. Special forms can also be obtained from the Board for filing this application.

I am enclosing herewith instruction sheet -- NLRB-1083, together with a copy of Public Law 101, and bulletins one to five explaining the Taft-Hartley Act.

THE TAFT-HARTLEY LAW. We don't like it and will use all honorable means to repeal it.

YET, we have signed for the protection of our members the necessary affidavits that our leaders are not COMMUNISTS, and as has always been our custom we have supplied our members with financial statements.

MEMBERS ARE ENTITLED TO KNOW WHERE THEIR MONEY COMES FROM AND HOW IT IS SPENT

THAT'S DEMOCRACY.

For labor leaders to refuse to comply with the law, such refusal which might lead to a STRIKE, is not LEADERSHIP.

The law says you must prove representation. There is only two ways to do this - one by an election the other by a STRIKE.

Which is the common sense way?

We think presently, YOU ARE BEING MISLED.

DO YOU WANT REAL LEADERSHIP, LEADERSHIP THAT IS NOT AFRAID TO PROCLAIM THAT THEY ARE NOT COMMUNISTS?

LEADERSHIP THAT CAN IMPROVE YOUR WORKING CONDITIONS, WITHOUT A STRIKE.

The Hotel and Restaurant Employees International Union offers YOU such leadership.

The entire strength of THE WASHINGTON CENTRAL LABOR UNION and THE AMERICAN FEDERATION IS YOURS, if you want it.

Just as soon as we have your authorization, we will petition the NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD for collective bargaining rights for YOU. And you will be advised of every step taken.

29 Congressmen Say: Hartley Bill Is A New Guarantee of Industrial Slavery

1. The employer is granted new rights and powers to destroy labor and to substitute individual bargaining for collective bargaining.

2. The employer is given the right to bring anti-trust actions against his employes, to institute criminal prosecutions against them, to sue them for treble damages and to obtain ex parte injunctions without a hearing against them. But the employer's violation of the law is subject merely to a cease and desist order issued after administrative hearing and court review.

3. The employer is granted the right to compel employes to accept a wage cut through forced labor for indefinite periods of time.

4. The employer receives the right to break strikes caused by his own illegal conduct.

5. The employer is granted the right to obtain injunctions against strikes which have been legal for the past 50 years.

6. The employer retains the right to bargain through an employers' association but bargaining through national unions is outlawed.

7. The employer is granted the right to disregard the bargaining agent and to play employes against each other.

8. The employer is granted the right to sit at both sides of the bargaining table by establishing company unions.

9. The employer is granted the right to disregard the bargaining agent and to refuse to bargain about such matters as health and welfare plans, apprentice training programs and speed-up.

10. The employer is given the right to break a strike for recognition even though the union represents an overwhelming majority of the employes.

11. The employer is given the right to outlaw and to crush any strike by hiring strikebreakers even though the strike is caused by his own misconduct.

12. The employer is given the right to cooperate with anti-labor employers in order to destroy unions.

13. The employer is given the right to lockout and blacklist office clerks if they join a union.

14. The employer is given the right to invoke injunctions, treble damage suits and criminal penalties against the employes in one department if they strike against a wage cut in another department.

15. The employer is given the right to instigate criminal prosecutions against individuals who exercise the right to picket.

16. The employer is given the right to prevent the designation of a bargaining agent for a period of years.

17. Spies may be planted in the union ranks by the employer and the union is powerless to expel them.

18. The employer is given the right to grant or deny union security as he wishes; he is not required even to discuss it with the union and he may crush a strike or a threat of strike to obtain it.

19. The employer is given the right to crush any strike when a collective bargaining contract exists even if the strike is caused by an issue not covered by the contract.

20. The employer is given the power to obtain from the government a death warrant for the union of his employes.

The Above Statement Sponsored by the Following Congressmen:

Dear Sir and Brother:

As you no doubt know, our State Federation of Labor has established a Department of Research and Education for the purpose of educating our members in the many problems that arise daily in the labor movement. This department was established by the unanimous vote of our 1946 convention. Since that time it has carried on a program that has been very effective toward the solution of many of our problems here.

I am informed by the Director of our department, Brother R. A. DuVall, that a great part of the present activities of the department are concentrated on familiarizing our people with the provisions and effects of the Taft-Hartley Act on their respective organizations. He asked me that I request of you, a continuing supply of the very excellent pamphlet material on the Taft-Hartley Act which is published by your office. It is my understanding that this material is distributed to the students in the classes conducted by the department and that it is vitally necessary to an effective program of this sort that this material be available in sufficient quantities. He informs me that a supply of 100 copies of each pamphlet per month will be adequate. Therefore, we are requesting of you, that in view of this need and if possible, that your office supply us with this number of pamphlets. Could you please drop me a line on this in order that I might assure our people that the material will be forthcoming?

With best wishes and kindest regards, I remain

Fraternally yours,

Edw. H. Weyler

Dear Mr. Meany:

My classes in American Govt. are getting ready to debate the question: Resolved: The Taft-Hartley Act is unfair to labor.

We are having difficulty in finding material for the affirmative. We find plenty for the negative. Can you send us any material which will show us why labor feels that this Act is unfair?

Mr. John Reid of the State office here gave us your name and address.

Dear Sirs:

For use in a study of the effect of federal labor legislation on employee magazines (house organs) I would appreciate an analysis of section 8 (1) of the National Labor Relations Act:

".....The following examples of employer activity have been held by the Board to constitute an unfair labor practice....general antiunion campaigns conducted through individual contacts through employees, orthrough meetings, pamplets or publications....."

as contrasted to Section 8 (c) of the Taft-Hartley Act:

"The dissemination of any views, argument or opinion, or the dissemination thereof, whether in written, printed or graphic form shall not constitute ~~xxxx~~ or be evidence of an unfair labor practice under any of the provisions of this Act, if such expression contains no threat of reprisal or force or promise of benefit."

& Have there been any cases of violation of this section of th Wagner Act?

What was the practice beofre the passage of the Wagner Act, in regard to the attitudes of employee magazines toward unions, which perhaps prompted the inclusion of Section 8 (1) and why wastthis repealed.

Are any employers taking advantage of this provision, and how?

What opposition have the unions made to inclusion of the quoted part of section 8 (1) of the Taft Hartley Act?

All other pertinent data on the subject will be appreciated.

Sincerely yours,

Bernard Bernstein

Author Says Taft-Hartley Bill Wrote Equity Into Laws

Congressman Tells Hunterdon Neighbors He Plans Petrillo Curb

"All we have done is to write 'equity' into our labor laws" Congressman Fred A. Hartley told an audience of his Hunterdon County farmer neighbors in speaking at Quakertown last Saturday.

Hartley, author of the Taft-Hartley Act, said that altho that measure had been called "drastic, punitive and a slave labor law" by union labor bosses, it deserves none of these labels.

Hartley announced in the course of his address that he plans to introduce in the next session of Congress another bill which, if passed, will definitely put an end to labor monopoly threats of James Caesar Petrillo of the Musicians Union and John L. Lewis of the United Mine Workers.

Hartley, who spoke at the annual dinner of the Hunterdon County Board of Agriculture, said he would move to apply the Sherman and Clayton anti-trust acts to labor monopolies. These acts, he asserted, were designed to cope with corporations which act in restraint of trade and they should be enforced to keep labor union monopolists in line also. "What's sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander", he asserted.

Another measure Congressman Hartley said he will introduce is one which will make it a federal offense for anyone to interfere with any person who wants to work. "Men should have the right to strike," said Hartley. "But I hold that there is an equally fundamental right—the right to work."

The congressman said he had been up until three weeks ago, "picketed by experts."

In recent months, since the passage of the law, he said he has traveled 25,000 miles and made many addresses in which he has told audiences of the content and purpose of the Taft-Hartley Act. He said he had passed thru picket lines comprising from six to 6,000 persons, that his home had been picketed as well as his office.

Contending that no measure recently enacted by Washington had involved more thorogoing research than the Taft-Hartley law, the congressman told of the 2,000,000 words of testimony the committee listened to and the extensive field work that was done in preparing the legislation. He said the measure is opposed mostly by the labor leaders whose powers are curbed by its provisions. Workers, he said, had supplied much of the information on which the law is based.

Provisions of the law which work chiefly in public interest, Hartley said, are those that deal with jurisdictional strikes, which prevent violence on the part of strikers, and deal with secondary boycotts. He said labor leaders had refused to cooperate in dealing with these abuses and thus invited the law.

$90,000,000 Construction Held-Up

Jurisdictional strikes have been holding up $90,000,000 worth of construction in New Jersey alone in recent months and the loss in man hours caused by such strikes would have built 215,000 6-room houses for veterans in America, Hartley declared.

"Hundreds of carpenters and building trades mechanics have written to our committee requesting the end of jurisdictional strikes, which the labor union leaders themselves would not settle".

"Secondary boycotts", Hartley said, "have been carried to the ridiculous point where in California milk deliverymen refused to deliver milk that was produced by cows that were fed feed delivered on the farmer's own truck, instead of by an organized teamsters truck".

He described another case in which a woman who raised turkeys in California lost $3,000 because packing house workers would not dress turkeys that had been plucked by other than union pluckers.

"The Taft-Hartley act cuts out that kind of foolishness", Hartley assured his audience.

Turning to the movie industry, Hartley said painters, carpenters and stagehands in the studios receive from $11,000 to $12,000 a year and there is constant bickering over "jurisdictional rights". "The costume makers are organized to the point where only a unionized worker can sew a hook and eye on an actress's gown and when it is replaced, another union worker has to be summoned to hook it up", the speaker alleged.

Hits Petrillo Monopoly

Turning to the Petrillo music monopoly, Congressman Hartley said even the Army, Navy and Marine Corps bands had been forced off the air and no more recordings are to be made after January 1.

Hartley declared that every protection for the worker in the Wagner Act remains in the Taft-Hartley Act and that only the labor bosses dictatorial powers are hit.

He said that members now get monthly financial statements from their unions, that exhorbitant initiation fees, fines and assessments are forbidden by the new law.

Turning to conditions that directly hit farmers of New Jersey, Hartley described some of the labor contracts that affect the handling of perishable foods in the Dock Street area of Philadelphia, which, among other things forbid a commission merchant to go to his own place of business Saturday without union permission.

"Advocates of the kind of labor laws we have had, have taught that the worst enemy the working man has is the man who hires him and pays him wages," Hartley said, in attacking the basic philosophy of much of the union leadership.

"We could increase wages and reduce prices in America only because we could increase the productivity of the worker," Hartley declared. "We cannot increase wages if the worker is going to listen to the labor boss's plea—get as much as you can for doing as little as possible."

Rather, he asserted, labor should adopt the slogan recently propounded by its more enlightened leaders:

"If you want to get more for the dollar you spend, give more for the dollar you earn."

In closing, Hartley expressed pride in the measure that bears his name. He said:

"I only ask that both management and labor give the Taft-Hartley law a fair chance. If they do, I am fairly well satisfied we are going to embark on an era of prosperity and peace such as we have not seen in many a decade."

Hartley was introduced by Clifford E. Snyder, president of the Board of Agriculture. In opening his remarks he announced his intention of leaving Congress at the termination of his term next year and said he hoped to "live in Hunterdon County and take part in its community affairs, but not its political affairs."
